

SERENITY IN SILENCE

She shared her pain with the silent sky above,
The sky turned red, then black, as if it knew her heart.
She remembered the chaos of her life,
And the sky grew heavy with her sorrow.
She wept, and the sky wept with her in the rain,
While the gentle breeze touched her tearful face.
In the beauty of nature, she found some comfort,
In the quiet words of the earth.
The sky became her listener and faithful friend,
Understanding the words she could not express.
Life felt empty without her father,
Yet the sky became his silent face above her.
The clouds carried his gentle touch,
And every star reflected his love and grace.
Though he had disappeared from her sight,
His presence remained in the light of nature.
Whenever she felt alone, she looked above,
For the endless sky had become her father's home.
In its silence, she could still hear his loving voice,
Reminding her that a father's love never fades.

Bionote:

Dr. S. Sujitha is an Assistant Professor in the Department of English at Jawahar Science College, Neyveli, Tamil Nadu. She holds an M.A., M.Phil. and Ph.D. in English and has over eight years of experience in teaching and higher education. Her academic and research interests include Indian English literature, women's writing, gender studies and contemporary literary criticism. Her research engages with questions of femininity, women's identity and self-discovery, reflected in her scholarly work on the writings of Manju Kapur and Kamala Das. She has contributed research articles to academic journals and is also associated with undergraduate and postgraduate academic evaluation.