

NATURE: A SILENT TEACHER

The Sun gives its warmth, and the Earth receives it,
Turning endlessly to nurture every living thing.
Clouds may cover the Sun, but they never stay forever,
Teaching us that every darkness has an end.
The rain falls upon the Earth, yet it never complains,
It drinks the water and gives life to trees and seeds.
A tree bends when the wind changes its direction,
For bending keeps it strong when standing still may break it.
A seed grows through darkness, always searching for light,
Teaching us to move forward even when life feels uncertain.
Birds face the rain, yet they build their nests with care,
Learning to live with the changes that nature brings.
A river does not fight every rock in its way,
It changes its course and finds another path forward.
We too may face bitter days and difficult roads,
But patience can lead us towards sweeter moments.
Acceptance is not surrender or a sign of weakness,
It helps us live with what we cannot change.
The seed is our beginning, the river our journey,
And nature silently teaches us to know ourselves.
